Perhaps, but are not the reactionaries clothes outmoded already But a critic must have more than the modern spirit, if he is to fulfill his function. He must hold the balance not only between art and life, but between past and present. He must see the present as the child of the past. Balance must therefore be the aim. It will not be our achievement--perfect balance is attained only in death. We aspire to live. And life in its highest manifestation is the striving of atoms to find order in chaos. The balance attained is tentative, the pendulum swings around the centre, but it is dynamic. And there is no life without movement, no movement without passion. o o This is at least a beginning. Let us face the future. . G. C. E. would draw for...
